CONNECTING GLOBAL CULTURE & LOCAL AGRICULTURE
MUSIC FOR FARMS

The MISSION of Music For Farms is to support healthy, cohesive communities by connecting classical, contemporary, and world music with local, sustainable agriculture, and thereby

- * to demonstrate the indivisibility of culture and agriculture;
- * to strengthen and unite both classical music and farming communities;
- * to compose and perform music for a more important social outcome;
- * and to draw awareness to the communal importance of growing and eating local, bio-dynamically grown food.

THE HISTORY

Founded and conceptualized in New York and Canada by musicians and farmers John McDowell and Emmanuel Vukovich, Music for Farms is a steadily growing musical ensemble which tours venues and farms, performing classical music as well as original compositions and world music arrangements. The group is particularly interested in music inspired by an exploration of connecting opposites – such as in their original work based on Wolfram von Eschenbach’s Parcifal legend, the meeting of Eastern and Western classical music in their own transcription of Ravi Shankar and Yehudi Menuhin’s Swara Kakali, in their personal backgrounds of jazz and classical music, and finally in their own lives of practicing music and farming side by side.

John runs an organic, biodynamic farm in Rockland County, NY and founded the Rockland Farm Alliance.

Canadian-born violinist and composer Emmanuel Vukovich has performed across Europe, the United States, Australia, and Canada. Born in 1980, he received the Golden Violin Award from McGill University's Schulich School of Music and the Canada Council for the Arts Orford String Quartet Scholarship. Emmanuel left home at sixteen to study with Dorothy Delay and Masao Kawasaki at the Juilliard School in New York City. He completed his music studies at McGill University in Montreal working with Denise Lupien and André Roy at the Schulich School of Music, while also completing a minor in Environmental Studies.
